One feature of this book is a contention
"From PC to Computer-based Home Electronics".
Maybe for this reason, this book "hhhhh" has been very often quoted at the announcement of (Universal Protocol of Computer-based Home Electronics).

My impression is that this is no longer a book of recognition engineering, but a guide book for product
design or product development (based on a UI-like sense).
Is this dependent on whether the writer "ggggg" has become a member of the company, or he expects interfaces linked with computer-based home electronics in future?

This is "ggggg"'s latest book, but it seems under influence of the editor "iiii".
